

What Should I Cook???

Situation: A couple's conversation through video call.

M: Hi honey. What are you up to?

W: Actually, I'm starving and planning to cook something. Any suggestions for today's dinner? I have potatoes and carrots in the fridge.

M: Uhm, let's see... How about potato salad? It was super good the last time you made it!

W: Maybe... no. I don't think that'll fill me up enough.

M: Hmm... How about curry? You can save some for tomorrow's breakfast as well!

W: No... Curry for dinner does not sound right for me. Plus, I'm on a diet, so curry is probably too much.

M: Then... how about potato pancakes? Mash the potatoes, mix with flour and other ingredients, fry them, and that's it! Simple but delicious!

W: Ken, I just said that I'm on a diet!!! FLOUR? Then FRY them? Are you kidding me? It'll probably turn ME into a potato instead!

M: Sorry, sorry. Then... uhm, how about potato soup? Very light.

W: Maybe... no. I want something to eat, like... something that I can chew.

M: I see... How about... baked potatoes? Just bake them, and you don't need to add butter if you're worried about your weight.

W: Baked potatoes... without butter or cheese? Too boring! It'll taste like nothing. Oh... it's OK, Ken. I made up my mind.

M: So, what are you going to cook?

W: Potato salad! Fresh and light. Perfect for a diet!

M: But I ALREADY suggested that as a first option! And you said you wouldn't be full by just eating potato salad!

W: Oh well, among the options you suggested I think this is the best. See you later! (Hanging up the video call)

M: Ah! How do I get into these conversations?

(Written by Pornphan WAJJWALKU (Pin))

 It's a Good Expression ***

(今回の重要表現)

What are you up to?

今何してる？

starving

はらぺこの

potatoes and carrots

※複数形を意識して発音しよう

fridge

冷蔵庫 (refrigerator)

super

とても (very)

fill O up

Oをお腹いっぱいにする

curry

カレー (発音注意)

Plus

その上

flour

小麦粉

turn A into B

AをBにする

make up my mind

決心する